OUT ISLANDS

Top marks from Barron's

Barron's magazine has ranked the Out Islands of The Bahamas as number three on its list of emerging retirement spots. The publication says the islands' relatively low property values, attractive tax structure and reasonable cost of living make them a surprisingly affordable choice. Non-Bahamian investors and homeowners can easily obtain residency permits in The Bahamas, and major international investors and owners of residences valued at $500,000 or more are given accelerated consideration for their annual or permanent residence applications.
